Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: ...else again and puy dat too. But de men, no, ven dey are troo tradting day just sit and chew de rag all day. Dell me something what to get ridt of dem and I puy you a goodt seegar on de house." Herman's an Anti-Suffragette Herman has three male helpers and is one of those kind of men who think that women don't know much. "Mr. Van Valkenburg," I says, "I got you. I'll take that smoke now. You've got nobody but men working for you and you handle a lot of staple dry goods. You put a woman in here to sell dry goods--a nice, smart-looking woman--and you'll see the men scoot. Put in store stools screwed to the floor and throw away all these chairs you have sitting around promiscuous. Go to work and scrub this floor until it looks clean and then douse it with floor oil so that the dirt won't stick hereafter. Men loafers don't like a clean store and they don't like women. You have been keeping your store so filthy with no women clerks about is the reason the loafers like it. "Clean up and be sanitary. Women trade is the most of your business anyway and the German women especially like to see things clean." Herman Takes On the Plan "Dramp," says Herman, "how much it cost you reckon fer a purty gurl?" "Oh, a good saleslady," I replied, "oughtn't to cost you over thirty dollars a week." "Dirty dollars a week? Gott in Himmel!" says Herman. "Vy is women so expensive? Dat is more as I pay mineself and de two men what work for me all togedder!" "Well, pay her three dollars a week," I says, "but get her and see that she can speak German." "I'll go you vonce, Dramp, if I lose. I haf been reading your adwicc in The Reporter for tree years and haffn't readt anytin...
