Escape with this steamy standalone Historical Regency Romance between a smart and sassy BBW and her brother's brutish best friend.

In Victorian Era London, Catharine Sadlier has hated James Warner for years. Though he is a close friend of her brother's and to the entire family, Catharine cannot even tolerate his presence. He is such a selfish brute who always makes fun of her and treats her charity work with disrespect. She swears she will despise this man forever, but when she shows him the horrible state in which London's poor people live, his heart softens toward her charity. More than that, he wants to help her obtain funds for it—to help the unfortunate; he shows a completely different side to himself, and as the two of them raise money to help the poor, Catharine is shocked to discover herself falling in love with this man.

Through works of kindness, sincere words, and plagues of doubt, Catharine and James learn that in order for change to happen, people must be willing to take a leap of faith.
