What goes up must come down...

The chase is on, and Ella and Tyson are on the precipice of escape. Now they just have to prove that they didn't murder anyone... And avoid the remnants of the Highway Reapers who are hell-bent on winning.

And after years of falling, for Ella Louise, someone might just be there to catch her.

But tensions rise faster than ever – as doubt seeps in and desperation reaches an all-time high. It'll take more than good looks and luck to pull through this, but Tyson's determination to protect Ella is a force to be reckoned with.

But he's only got one chance.

Ella's not going down without a fight, either. With their lives at stake, their last hope is to put full faith in one another, and come up with a last minute plan that will turn the tables. It's a long shot, but it's the best chance they've got if they want to make it out together.

EXCERPT

Just like that, she perked up and hopped off the bed. She could really move when she wanted to. All he could see was pink skin and red hair as she dashed into the bathroom.

"You go pretty fast when you need to don't you, sugar?"

"I have lots of hidden talents. Stick around, and you'll see more of them." That look of hers was back, and he wondered exactly what was going on inside her head. Was she thinking of him going to the prison she recently vacated, or was she thinking that she was going to get pinned with another bad rap? So many troubles clouded her eyes in the last few days, but he couldn't do anything about them now. All he could do was give her tonight and hope in the next few days they could figure out how to get out of this fire that they'd jumped into from the treacherous frying pan they were in the other day.

"That is my plan, little lady, to stick around as long as possible."
