Flying into History: Meet the Heroes of Air Force Flying Class 55N (Volume 2) Richard E. Pierson

Flying into History is about the heroes of Air Force Flying Class 55N. They all flew for the Air Force in defense of our country during a time of three wars, the ending of the Korean War, the Vietnam War, and the Cold War. Yes, the Cold War was dangerous and some aircraft were shot down. Three of the 55N Class pilots lost their lives in combat in Vietnam. None of them even flinched at being sent into harm's way for military needs whether it be combat or other military needs. All of their stories are interesting. They include such stories as flying as Forward Air Controllers in Vietnam putting close air support fighters and gunships on the enemy to save friendly ground forces under attack, combat rescue in Cambodia after being shot down, ejecting from an aircraft without using the parachute and surviving, surviving mid-air collisions, developing the AC-47, AC-130, B-58, FB-111, F-16, and Titan IIIC space booster, attacking tanks in Laos with an AC-119K gunship, making a zero/zero landing in a C-124, and many other miraculous saves from aircraft emergencies.
